Kohl Minister Urged to Quit

BONN - West German officials asked East Germany on Monday for permission to contact Hans Joachim Tiedge, the top counteres-pionage official who defected last week, to determine if he left because of personal problems or political reasons.

A government spokesman, Friedhelm Ost, said the authorities hoped to convince Mr. Tiedge to renim to the West.

Mr. Ost refused further comment on the talks, and said he knew nothing about reports that Mr. Tredge had refused to meet with West German diplomats. Chancellor Helmut Kohl, mean-

In the Soviet Union, a Modern Society Is Beset by a Host of Modern Problems

By Seth Mydans New York Times Service

MOSCOW - The Soviet Union is in the grip of a demographic and social revolution that is breaking up families, lowering the birthrate and contributing to alcoholism, juvenile delinquency and crime, a leading Soviet researcher says.

"Today's young family is full of conflict, unstable, and with few children," said Viktor L Perevedentsey, a senior demographer with the Soviet Academy of Sciences. Under the pressures of a nationwide shift in social values and ways of life, he said, more than one-third of these families break up. In the vorce rate has risen to 50 percent.

France Clears Agency Of Role in Ship Sinking

Opposition Sees Cover-Up

By Joseph Fitchett

PARIS — A special French in vestigator exonerated the govern-ment and its main intelligence agency Monday in the sinking of a ship belonging to the Greenpeace environmental movement last month in New Zealand.

The government-appointed investigator, Bernard Tricot, confirmed that two teams of French secret agents were in the Auckland area at the time of the attack, but he said he believed that neither had carried it out. He was unable to say who might have done it.

The findings seemed to lessen the threat of a major political scandal for France's Socialist government. But the opposition attacked the Tricot report as a cover-up, and a Greenpeace official called it "a whitewash.

The New Zealand government indicated earlier that it had evidence linking French agents to the explosion that caused the sinking, in which a photographer in the crew was killed. In his report, Mr. Tricot said: "On the basis of the information available to me at this time, I do not believe there was any official French responsibility." French newspapers and New Zealand officials have charged that French intelligence agents sank the vessel, the Rainbow Warrior, to sabotage a Greenpeace protest demonstration against French nuclear tests in the South Pacific. The Tricot report said that five French intelligence agents were in New Zealand at the time of the sinking, but added that they had orders to obtain information about Greenpeace and possibly infiltrate the movement, not act against it.

Saying that he believed the agents had not exceeded their instructions, Mr. Tricot, nonetheless, recommended further inquiries into their conduct in the Pacific. He said that if the attack on the ship was an official French misn, it was carried out in an astonishingly slipshod manner. All five agents - four men and a in - belong to France's foreign intelligence agency, the General Directorate for External Security, which is known by its French initials, DGSE. The four men are current or former members of a special underwater demolition unit that is linked to the DGSE.

Alain Madelin, an opposition parliamentarian, accused the report of "taking the French people for imbeciles." He said that agents with this specialized training would not have been sent to New Zealand just to take pictures.

France, he said, had "carried out a terrorist act." The report by Mr. Tricot, a Gaullist, was certain to be wel-comed by the Socialist government. Press criticism has led to speculation that Desense Minister Charles Hernu would resign. Mr. Hernu has responsibility for the DGSE.

The newspaper Le Monde, however, said that public opinion probably would believe that Mr. Tricot agreed to accept the DGSE's version of events to protect what he considered to be France's national Before the report's release, gov ernment sources in New Zealand were quoted as saying that evidence had been obtained, and given to Mr. Tricot, that linked French intelligence agents to the operation. David Lange, the New Zealand prime minister, said Sunday that this information would test the credibility of the Tricot report, and that he would find it hard to believe any report clearing French intelli-

While not disclosing the information from New Zealand, Mr. Tricot said that "everything I have seen and heard convinces me that the government made no decision that might have led to damage to the Rainbow Warrior."

He added that "there is no reason to believe (and in fact many reasons to doubt) that France's intelligence agency gave its agents in New Zealand any other instructions beyond executing the government's orders."

Mr. Tricot had access to all the senior French officials involved and most of the agents, but he conceded that there could have been a cover-up because most of the orders in the case were given orally. He also acknowledged that the affair may rebound when a hearing opens in November in New Zealand on charges against two French intelligence officers arrested there after the sinking. An hour before the Tricot report was released, three other agents, who are sought on international warrants by New Zealand, gave themselves up to the police in Paris and were released pending investi-

In the future, the Pentagon official said, the air force also expects to conduct tests of energy-beam veapons, including lasers, for use against satellites. Such weapons also are considered a leading candidate for a role in the Strategic Desense Initiative.

test next month, saying it may poison the atmosphere for talks between President Reagan and Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the Soviet leader, in November.

The critics also see anti-satellite weapons as the precursor of something much bigger. Testing of such weapons, they argue, will build up pressure to scrap the anti-ballistic missile treaty and proceed with a leapfrogging arms race in space. Both in Congress and at arms negotiations in Geneva, the effort to limit space weapons has centered on the anti-satellite, or ASAT, program, because SDI still is a nebulous assortment of components that exist only on drawing boards and in laboratories. The House of Representatives voted in June to ban anti-satellite tests as long as the Soviet Union continued its two-year moratorium on such tests. But the ban was dropped in a House-Senate conference on the military authorization bill. That measure is awaiting a final House vote in September.

Mr. Brown, who led the fight for an anti-satellite ban, said that his effort was not an indirect attack on SDI but an attempt to make the Reagan administration take arms control more seriously. But he acknowledged that the two programs were inseparable. The test next month will be the PHNOM PENH — A Cambodian official has declared that if a drought now scorching the paddy fields of several provinces does not end within the next month, the country could face a rice shortage of a million metric tons.

The official, Nhim Vanda, the deputy minister of state planning spoke at a news conference last week outlining the country's first five-year plan, which will be introduced at the Cambodian Communist Party's fifth congress.

Agriculture will be at the heart of the plan, he said. In the increasingly integrated economies of Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia, Phnom Penh appears to have been assigned to produce food and raw materials such as rubber and timber. Last year, drought and flooding combined to cause a 400,000-metric-ton shortfall in milled rice, which was considered very serious by the Cambodian government.

Food relief from international organizations was sought.

AUBURN, Maine — Samantha Smith, the American schoolgirl who wrote to Yuri V. Andropov two years ago about her fear of nuclear war and then visited the Soviet Union as his guest, died in a plane crash Sunday

Jeff Gongoll, the Auburn airport manager, said that the twin-engine Beechcraft plane carrying six passengers and two crew members crashed in a wooded area just short of the runway, killing all those aboard. The Bar Harbor Airlines plane was on a flight from Boston and the pilot had reported no problems, Mr. Gongoll said.
There was no immediate indication of what caused the crash. The state medical examiner, Dr. Henry Ryan, said that Samantha, 13, and her father, Arthur Smith, were among the passengers.

Soviet Operation in Angola Is Alleged

PARIS (AP) — Soviet soldiers have joined with Angolan government forces in an offensive against insurgents, the rebel National Union for the Total Independence of Angola said Monday in Paris.

Paulo Gato, a spokesman in France for the guerrilla group, said that a Soviet infantry battalion was actively involved in the operation aimed at sheltering Luanda from rebel action in anticipation of a meeting of the Nonaligned Movement there in September. Mr. Gato said that the Angolan government was anxious "to prove it is in control of the situation and to thus realize a good propaganda effort." He said that the offensive had resulted in fierce combat in east-central Angola about 525 miles (850 kilometers) from Luanda, notably at

Lebanon Militia Chiefs Meet Syrians

BEIRUT (UPI) - Lebanese Moslem militia chiefs and Syrian officials met Monday in Damascus to discuss a Christian refusal to accept Syrian observers as part of a cease-fire in Lebanon. Reports circulated about a French proposal for a new Western observer force in Beirut, but there were no details.

The Damascus talks involved Nabih Berri, leader of the Shiite Amal militia; Walid Jumblat, the Druze leader, and Vice President Abdel Halim Khaddam, militia sources said. Beirut radio said that a Lebanese Christian envoy might bead for Syria on Tuesday.

Last weekend, Mr. Berri threatened open war if Syrian observers were not allowed deep in Christian territory to watch heavy guns. Christian leaders said that Syrian observers should stay on the front lines. Mr. Berri's militia was reported by the Christian radio Monday to be moving reinforcements and heavy guns to positions overlooking Christian areas. But the front lines were reported quiet Monday at the start of a two-day

Vietnam Approves Cambodia Talks

JAKARTA (AP) — Vietnam's foreign minister, Nguyen Co Thach, said Monday he had agreed to meet with officials from six southeast Asian nations to discuss the occupation of Cambodia and the guerrilla war against the Hanoi-backed government in Phnom Penh.

The statement by Mr. Thach, who departed for Moscow after a five-day visit to Indonesia, appeared to soften slightly Vietnam's policy against international meetings on the 160,000 Vietnamese troops in

"We have a compromise in mind," said Mr. Thach's Indonesian counterpart, Mochtar Kusumaatmadja. Mr. Thach agreed that Vietnam's occupation of Cambodia and regional peace are closely tied, but said that the world "must see both sides" of the dispute.

The country's crippling housing shortage adds to the pressures on urban families, where young married couples may have to wait months or years for an apartment where they can live together apart from their parents.

Their cramped quarters, once they get them, contribute to the small families they choose to raise and to the pressures of home life that drive them apart. And they can make divorce doubly painful when an estranged couple is forced to remain together, in some cases for months or years, until they can find separate apartments.

All these pressures contribute to a birthrate that lags well below the needs of the work force. An optimum birth rate would be 1,200 or more children for each

1,000 people, Mr. Perevedentsev said. The rural birth rate approaches this, but the urban rate is 880 per 1,000 and in the big cities, it has fallen below 700 per 1,000.

Just 30 years ago, two-thirds of the Soviet population was rural. The proportion has shifted and now more than two-thirds live in cities. The result is a new and unusual freedom in life, with people cut loose from the ties of family and village and seeking persona satisfaction and advancement in a new atmosphere. Fully one-fifth of the Soviet labor force changes jobs each year, statistics show.

The number of people migrating to cities each year, Mr. Perevedentsev said, is 3 million to 4 million. with 1.5 million to 2 million moving in the other direction. That means a net shift of 1.5 million to 2 million people to the cities each

A major problem, he said, is that the shift from rural areas is not taking place where it is needed. In European Russia, where a stable rural work force is needed and where cities are filling their own manpower needs by normal growth, about 25 people per 1,000 cave for the cities each year. In Soviet Central Asia, however, the population growth rate is much higher, producing workers that are needed in the industrially develop-ing areas of the nation. Yet in Central Asia, only four people per 1,000 leave their rural homes each

Partly at Mr. Perevedentsev's initiative. Soviet high schools have started a course called "The Ethics and Psychology of Family Life," which he said would take over some of the educational role of parents, a parental function that has suffered.

But what is ultimately needed, he said, is for the sociological process caused by the nation's rural-urban shift to play itself out and for people to develop new social rules that fit the small, pressurized family, in which each person shares the burden of both work and homemak-

U.S. Agrees to Pay Crash Victims' Families

By Philip M. Boffey New York Times Service WASHINGTON - The U.S.

government has agreed to pay millions of dollars to relatives of the 145 passengers killed in the crash of a Pan American World Airways jetliner outside New Orleans in 1982, according to officials of the Federal Aviation Administration. The crash was attributed to violent wind shifts that caused the plane to dive suddenly. Relatives of the victims said the FAA failed to alert the Pan American pilot sufficiently about possible wind shear and was partly at fault.

Frederick H. Farrar, an FAA spokesman, said Sunday that the government had agreed with Pan American's insurance carriers to split the payments to the survivors, with the government and the airline each paying half.
"It was cheaper for the FAA to pay half the damages than to con-test it," Mr. Farrar said. "We did not believe then and do not believe Experts investigating the crash of a Delta Air Lines jet in Dallas on Aug. 2 have also focused on wind shear as a possible cause.

Officials of the FAA and Michael J. Pangia, a lawyer whose firm represented two plaintiffs in the 1982 case, said the FAA had paid damages in other cases where the agency seemed likely to be in the millions of dollars but not judged parily culpable for an accident, so the latest settlement would have no special impact as a precedent on claims arising from the Delta crash.

The South Africa Debate

Something ritual, reflexive and off the point has seized the debate in America about South Africa. People seem more interested in demolishing each other's arguments and in justifying their own prior political biases than in trying to understand what is going on in South Africa and what the U.S. position should be. Every cliché in the book has been trotted out. Empty theorizing runs riot. It is lots of fun. But it is reckless. America needs a clear, strong, broadly agreed upon, bipartisan policy toward South Africa, its government and its turmoil. It is a measure of the self-absorption and confusion reigning at the moment that even this self-evident proposition is held in doubt. There is nothing America can do, so it should do nothing — this is an only slightly exaggerated form of an argument one increasingly reads and hears. It is made most often by conservatives, and it rests almost entirely on reasoning that conservatives themselves deride when it is hurled at them from the other side in arguments over how America should react to various Soviet outrages. Left and right are still at it, only they have had a kind of cultural exchange of their own: Each side has stolen the other's arguments. Nobody seems ashamed.

These arguments — overstated, extreme do not stand up much better in the South African context than when applied to East-West matters. They have the same unmistakable aspect of debating points that may or may not have anything to do with reality. Thus we find conservatism arguing about President Botha (as liberalism is wont to do about whoever is Soviet party secretary that year) that, thuggish as his acts may look, he is a considerable breakthrough toward decency and reform, and that to push him in any respect is to endanger him with the "hard-liners" in his own camp and to show, as said hard-liners have always argued, that reasonableness doesn't pay.

A variation, which conservatives have hooted down when it was made by their liberal opponents in relation to taking tough action against places from North Vietnam to Nicaragua, is that tough action will only unify the country around its presiding villain and thus work in the opposite way from that intended. Besides, say a few of these folks whose instinct for interventionism is generally strong (and sound), it is surely none of our business how they organize their affairs in South Africa. Finally there comes what the right, in another context, denounces as "moral equivalence," that insistence on seeing both sides at fault no matter how towering the crime of one may be in relation to that of the other.

Hold the mirror up to this and you will see how those who can provide you with any number of impassioned arguments as to why the United States should follow a policy of "constructive engagement" toward the Soviet Union, no matter what it does, and who are often indifferent to or doubtful about its brutalities, have reversed polemic course just as thoroughly as their antagonists have.

At about this point you will hear the nuclear bolocaust argument made. Those who are forever arguing that to get tough in any respect or any degree with the Soviets over anything is to invite almost certain obliteration of the planet will protest that the Soviet case is a special one. But the apartheid pacifists have their own variation on this ultimate threat. Again and again one will hear that the risk in pushing Mr. Botha is that the world will end up with a brutish black African anarchy on the Ugandan model. There is a little of the when-you'veseen-one-you've-seen-them-all mentality to this. But it is also true that no one can look at the political and economic condition of most of the newly liberated countries of black Africa and hope that South Africa minus apartheid will end up like them.

The point is, however, that, just as it is possible (and necessary) to press the Soviets on questions of human rights and political subversion and aggression without inviting nuclear war, so it is possible (and necessary) to press the white apartheid government of South Africa to abandon its institutionalized cruelties without inviting a nightmare of anarchy.

Mr. Botha would like you to think otherwise. He and his government keep putting forward these two false alternatives: Leave us alone or risk the disintegration and impover-ishment of the land. But the real alternative to what he is doing is to end a system of gratu-itous cruelty and oppression visited on people for no other reason than their race. It is the continuation of that system, more than anything else, that is likely to bring on precisely the violent debacle he purports to be warding off. Conservatives who understand that abject appeasement is likelier to lead to nuclear war an to avert it should have little trouble understanding that the same is true of the South African version of the holocaust.

The white South African government, famous for its habit of gunning down peaceful protesters for over a quarter of a century now, has resisted every inch of the way taking those steps that could ameliorate the system, always giving too little and too late. It is sometimes noted in distinguishing South Africa from various totalitarian and authoritarian states that certain elements of democratic openness are present there as compared with other tyrannies. This is true, but it hardly extenuates the gun-enforced mass racial repression.

Rather, it suggests that pressure may have some response. On both moral and political grounds, it seems to us, there is an obligation for the United States, on which Pretoria so greatly depends, to press it to take advantage of what remains of the opportunity to reach a just and stable solution. America does have power: it does have influence: it does have responsibility; it does have urgent cause to act while there are still parties around with whom the Botha government can deal. Isolation, abdication, the big shrug would be criminal.

Less Liberty in Liberia American help as a haven for freed black

Unhappy Liberia has its own version of one man, one vote. There, only one man's vote matters. He is Samuel K. Doe, a former sergeant who at age 28 ensconced himself as president in 1980 after his soldiers bayoneted a civilian predecessor. He is now a five-star general whose most conspicuous victory is over the calendar. He has added two years to his age so that, officially, he will be 35, as choose him for president in November.

To assure that election result, all serious opposition parties have been ruled ineligible, their leaders jailed, their newspapers silenced. The most formidable challenger is Ellen Johnson-Sirleaf, candidate of the Liberal Action Party. Harvard-educated and a former minister of finance, Mrs. Johnson-Sirleaf has been Citibank's representative in Nairobi. In a re-cent speech in Philadelphia, she faulted Liberia's lavish public spending. For this she was arrested on her return to Monrovia, accused of endangering stability. Last week, incredibly, she was put on trial for sedition.

All this cries out for more than a routine response. Americans have special historic ties to Liberia, which was established in 1822 with slaves. Its use of English, its constitution and even its flag reflect this history. But the promise of liberty has never been realized. Liberians have endured poverty and corrupt misgovernment, and General Doe's erratic despotism now outdoes that of his predecessors. Nonetheless, since his coup, U.S. foreign aid to Liberia has quadrupled to $83 million this year, the highest per capita figure in Africa. To induce him to hold the elections that he promised. $250,000 of this aid was earmarked to help pay the costs. General Doe denounced Washington for interfering and vowed to re-turn the money. Wholly in character, he hasn't. The general seemingly assumes that the Reagan administration will put up with anything so long as he makes anti-Communist noises and causes no trouble about a vital Voice of America transmitter. But jailing a Citibank representative for preaching fiscal conservatism shows neither scruple nor sense.

If Mrs. Johnson-Sirleaf and other challengers are barred from the election, a healthy cut in Liberian aid - especially $13 million in military aid - is one vote that America can cast. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Other Opinion

Botha Rounds Up the Talkers

As the hollow echoes of President Botha's empty "reform" speech die away, his police are busier than ever. The latest roundup of yet more leaders of the anti-apartheid United Democratic Front has serious implications. These are the kind of people with whom the authorities ought to be talking if the unspecified reform promises are ever to be taken seriously. What matters is that the white minority should hold unconditional negotiations with freely chosen African representatives. If the whites enter these oft promised talks with no intention of making any sacrifices of privilege, violence will gain even more appeal. White South Africans regard themselves as an unfairly unacknowledged adjunct of the West. It is the duty of the West, and its opportunity, to remind them of the lowest common denomi nator for membership of our club, which implies repeal of the most savage statutes to be found almost anywhere in the world.

The Japanese programme compels the Emperor of Corea to enact the farce of requesting the Emperor of Japan to take over the country, this request having been carefully formulated by the Tokio authorities. # A Record of Failure To Inflect Pretoria

By Joseph Kraft

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration has overplayed the U.S. hand in South Africa at all times. As a result, American impotence there has been advertised. Civil strife, far from being averted, has been promoted. Brutal confrontation is now apt to intensify.

Appeasement with an anti-Soviet spin was the form first taken by the policy puffed up into the term "constructive engagement." The theory was that P.W. Botha, having sprung from the security forces, was particularly keen to close South Africa's northern borders against forays from Angola and Mozambique by guerrillas of the African National Congress. From 1981 through 1984, U.S. policy centered on making peace along those borders, in return for American authors. support, Mr. Botha was to cease sab-

time when no other leading Sikh politician was prepared to sign a deal with the government, he did.

What convinced him was his belief that most Sikhs in the country were tired of agitation and of the obloquy otage operations by South African forces and their local "contras" against the two Marxist regimes, against the two Markist regimes, which were to shut down the ANC and end ties with Moscow, Havana and the rest of the international Communist gang. Progress along those lines was billed as the beginning of the end of Communist influence in southern Africa.

ence in southern Africa.

The policy failed either because Mr. Botha lost control over his security forces or, more likely, because he was diddling Washington all along.

The failure became absolutely certain when a South African raiding party was discovered trying to blow up installations of an American oil company in northern Angola. In protest, the United States withdrew its ambassador in Pretoria last June.

The racial situation inside South Africa had taken a violent turn 18 months before. In place of the banned ANC there sprung up a Unit-ed Democratic Front linking black clergy and trade union leaders. To protest against miserable economic conditions and a denial of political rights, the UDF launched strikes. boycotts and demonstrations. Last fall 16 UDF leaders were arrested and charged with treason.

The arrests ended chances for serions dialogue. Blacks increasingly, used force against other blacks working for the regime. Police crackdowns accelerated the cycle of killing. The stage was set for a declaration of emergency on July 20.

In America, the arrest of the UDF leaders triggered a protest movement led by blacks and white liberals. Demonstrations were staged outside the South African Embassy, and moves to apply economic sanctions were launched in Congress. The Reagan administration viewed the protests as a ploy to hold blacks and liberals with the Democrats against President Reagan despite his landslide victory. As a counterploy, conservative Republicans were urged to join the protests, and Mr. Reagan himself received a black South African, Bishop Desmond Tutu. So there was no middle ground in the United States when President Botha's declaration of emergency stirred a furor in the Congress. Huge majorities in the House and the Senate whooped through separate bills applying punitive sanctions against South Africa. A conference compromise was arranged and passed by the House. Only the threat of a filibuster by Jesse Helms of North Carolina blocked Senate passage just before the August recess.

The administration claimed to welcome the threat of sanctions as a whip to force concessions from the Botha government. In that spirit the president's national security adviser, Robert C. McFarlane, and five other U.S. officials conferred with the South African foreign minister, Pik Botha. They emerged from the ses-sion voicing hope for concessions to be offered by President Botha in a speech set for Aug. 15.

The speech offered nothing new. Mr. McFarlane acknowledged disap-pointment. But he counseled blacks to explore possibilities with President op Tutu for not joining a group of clerics who visited Mr. Botha. The Reagan administration has tried all approaches on all parties and failed every time. It has tried to ap-pease Mr. Botha and failed. It has tried to threaten Mr. Botha and failed. It has tried to support the blacks and failed. It is now blaming the blacks - and failing once again. President Botha now knows that American policy in southern Africa is largely anti-Communist bluster. The blacks know it, too. Neither side has any reason to pay heed to Washing-ton, and the catastrophe that has been so long and noisily announced seems closer than ever.

At no time did the United States have a strong hand to play. It is not prepared to fight for justice in South Africa, nor to make economic sacrifice. But why pretend otherwise?

The answer lies deep in the national psyche. Fed up with years of trou-ble. America seeks reassurance. The Reagan administration provides it in a buoyant president with a genuine talent for retreating from failed poli-cies as if nothing had gone wrong. But later the storms gather — in the economy, in the Middle East and even in distant South Africa. Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

The Posthumous Reward for Moderation

By Dhiren Bhagat

B OMBAY — When it all started in the late 1970s, it was a case of Sikhs killing Sikhs — Jarnail Singh Bhindranwale's militant faction locked in conflict with a group it regarded as heretical. Then Sikhs killed Hindus. Then Hindus killed Sikhs. With last Tuesday's assassi-nation of Sant Harchand Singh Longowal, the moderate Sikh leader, by two Sikh extremists, it is Sikhs killing Sikhs once again.

But it is not back to square one. Mr. Longowal was the third lead-er to die in the triangular conflict, and the least charismatic. Each of the three died a violent death. Mr. Bhindranwale was killed when the Indian army stormed the Golden Temple in June last year. Indira Gandhi was assassinated by Sikh guards last October. All three leaders died when they thought they had achieved a position of strength. Mr. Longowal's death came less than a month after he negotiated a peace accord with Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi.

Mr. Longowal's publicity people introduced him to the press as the 'dictator" of Sikh agitation. Since he spoke no English, it is reasonable to suppose he was unaware of the associations of the word. He was the unlikeliest of dictators.

The guardian of a Sikh shrine in his home village of Longowal (bence his name), he emerged in regional politics for the Akali Dal party in the latter 1960s. A softspoken, unimposing man, he made no impact. But in 1975, during the emergency, the party leadership was in prison and someone had to step in. Mr. Longawal did just that. He was never a fighting man. At the beginning of the Amritsar agitation in 1982, I asked him what he thought of the Farsi verse in which the last Sikh guru legitimized the The Sikhs are a fighting people and use of the sword if all other means had failed. He smiled. He would not resort to violence, he said. He would rather the Sikhs sacrificed themselves to the enemy's violence. 1982 he should have isolated and resisted Mr. Bhindranwale, he em-

When Mr. Bhindranwale called up his own irresponsible agitation from the Golden Temple, Mr. Longowal muttered to an aide, "What is this dead snake they have put around our neck?" That was the time to shove off the snake, to challenge Mr. Bhindranwale when he was not yet a popular leader, to cement Hindu-Sikh ties that Mr. Bhindranwale was undermining with his sectarian propaganda. Instead, Mr. Longowal moved his own agitation to Amritsar, joining forces with Mr. Bhindranwale.

To be fair to Mr. Longowal, it is a difficult job being a Sikh moderate.

Mr. Longowal lost face when he surrendered to the army in the Golden Temple battle. After his release last February he traveled in Punjab trying to make extremist noises and win acceptability. It was a ploy that the government covertly endorsed. Occasionally he went too far, notably when he honored the family of one of Mrs. Gandhi's as-sassins. That earned him the wrath of the Indian press, which was fooled by his pretended extremism. The real extremists were not fooled. Piqued by his posing, they pulled out Mr. Bhindranwale's octopenarian father and set him up as a rival leader to Mr. Longowal In May, asked to settle a dispute in the Akali party, the old man hijacked the 65-year-old party from under Mr. Longowal's nose. Dismayed,

Mr. Longowal appeared to want to opt out of politics. At this point most people gave up on him. But he was persuaded to return of being regarded as subversive citizens. He calculated that they would welcome the pact, and he was right. With a few obvious exceptions, Sikhs all over India heaved a sign of relief, and the press made him a hero. "The dramatic accord," wrote a Sikh columnist, "is one of those historic moments which help a nation recover something of its natural, moral thythm after a radical breach in its tone and tenor."

The extremists have struck but it was not Mr. Longowal they wanted. It was the peace accord with Rajiv Gandhi that they wished to kill. The central government has de-layed the elections in Punjab by three days, to Sept 25. Those elections may have to be delayed much longer. But whether or not the peace accord survives, it was not a futile exercise. Something has been won. No Hindu mourned the death of Mr. Bhindranwale. Few Sikhs mourned Mrs. Gandhi's death and even if they did, they did not dare attend her funeral for fear of losing their lives. Mr. Longowal may have been the least charismatic of the three but his death has been mourned by Hindus and Sikhs. His funeral last Wednesday was attended by both communities

Yes, Reagan Has a Philosophy, but It Won't Work

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — Does Ron-ald Reagan have a political philosophy? Of course he does, you say; he is a conservative, urging self-reliance and all the old virtues. But wait - one of the central tenets of conservatism has been "fiscal responsibility," and the Reagan men have already doubled the national debt.

How about populist, embracing the anti-establishment resentments of the legions of little guys? No. The easy-money American populism of the past has become more of a political posture than a philosophy; it is now popularism, better suited to inpaigning than governing.

If neither strict conservative nor inflationary popularist, then what is he? One word he has used is federalist, which now means "not nationalist." He talks of shifting a share of attached - on the assumption that federal power to state and local anthority. Let's examine that. This year the president and Congress put an end to general revenue sharing. In a budget that needed cutting, it was the first cut made, $4 billion saved and none so poor as to do it reverence. I remember revenue sharing; it was part of "the new federalism." Concerved by Walter Heller, the Kennedy economist, and carried out a decade later by Richard Nixon, revenue sharing was seen as a way to shift power from Washington to the states and localities. The idea was to return a portion of the anticipated growth of revenues to political levels closer to the people, without federal strings tax collection was most efficient at the federal level, and decisions on spending would be most responsive if made on the local scene.

This is not Mr. Reagan's philosophy. Although he has spoken in the past about returning power to the states (through the transfer to them of federal revenue sources like excise taxes), his actions in office have been in the opposite direction. For example, at the core of his tax simplification is the end of deductibility of state and local taxes from federal taxes. Deductibility has been a bulwark of federalism, making taxation less painful for localities: The more you pay in local taxes, the more you take off your federal income tax. Thus, in both big actions in the creasingly preoccupied with the economic challenge from Japan.

I have been thinking hard about one aspect of the tragedy that killed 520 people in the crash earlier this month of a Japan Air Lines plane. I noted these lines in a story after the crash: "Japan Air Lines President Yasumoto Takagi announced tonight that he intended to resign 'as soon as the situation has settled down.' He told reporters, I want to take responsibility.' Such resigna-tions are common in the Japanese business and political world, where leaders are held to have ultimate responsibility for all acts of their subordinates. Mr. Takagi called on Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone today to inform him of his decision.

Mr. Nakasone reportedly admonished Mr. Takagi for the accident, saying that discipline at the airline had become lax." I wonder if there is not a lesson for Americans in the way the Japanese airline executive responded. This is not an exercise of finger-pointing. I am not thinking of the specific contrast to the Delta Airlines crash at Dallas-Fort Worth Airport a few days earlier, or to the accidents that have befallen Union Carbide at its plant in Institute, West Virginia, since the disaster last year with the same company's subsidiary in Bhopal, India.

The top executives of those companies are still in place, but my point is a broader one. I wonder if America has not lost the whole concept of accountability at the top and with it a sense of self-discipline and organizational discipline that is essential in a competitive world.

going back to the Vietnam War period, I have written about the loss of the healthy tradition of "resigna-tion on principle." People simply have forgotten how to quit their jobs when they find themselves in strong disagreement with the policy they are being asked to carry out.

Cyrus Vance provided a rare exception when he quit as Jimmy Car-ter's secretary of state, rather than attempt to justify the aborted Iranian hostage rescue effort that he had opposed in the private councils of the administration. The more typical pattern is to disagree in private. support the policy or action in public, and then resign for what you describe as other reasons -- as David Stockman recently did.

But today I am talking about a different kind of resignation, the kind offered voluntarily by the head of an organization when there has been a costly, damaging failure of performance by his organization. The examples that come to mind, unfortunately, all involved people from countries other than the United States. Mr. Takagi is one. Another notable example was Lord Car-rington, the British foreign secretary; he was a favorite of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and a man of great ability, yet he resigned the day after the Argentines occupied the Falklands. His ministry was responsible for the se-curity of the islands and for the macy that had failed to save them from invasion, so he stepped down. It was as simple as that.

Contrast that with the pattern of or several occasions in the past. evasion, procrastination and repudiation of responsibility we see so often by senior officials in both the private sector and government in America. The operative principle always somebody else's fault.

The pattern is not confined to one business, party or administration. But present government has been as flagrant in denying any sense of personal accountability as any i can remember. This is the first administration that tolerated having an indicted person — former Secretary of La-bor Raymond J. Donovan — retain a position in the cabinet. The list of those who fought to stay in their jobs, often with the president's in-dulgence, long after their unethical behavior, incompetence or chica-nery had been exposed is long enough to fill this page.

President Reagan damaged the principle of accountability in the uniformed services by claiming per-sonal responsibility for the deaths of the marines in the Beirut barracks bombing. That premature grandstanding prevented the ma-rines from dealing with the incident within their own chain of command, as they would otherwise have done. It damaged the system of accountability which all the armed services believe is essential to their discipline and performance, The relevance of all this to the controversy about the U.S.-Japa-nese trade imbalance is evident

Americans cannot compete unless they get tough, and the place to get tough is first with themselves. Leaders must set an example. And the example now being set by leaders in the United States, both in government and in business, is just arena of federalism - ending revenue sharing and proposing to end deductibility — Mr. Reagan has cho-sen to make it tougher for those levels of government "closer to the people."

Can it be that the Reagan approach is to centralize power, weaken state governments and impoverish localities — making him the biggest anti-federalist since FDR? It may seem that way, but I suggest that the direction of the flow of intergovernmental power is of little con-cern to Mr. Reagan. "Big govern-ment," to him, is not the federal government but the sum of all government. His philosophy is to reduce total government, and his technique can be summed up in three words: Make taxation painful.

That explains the demise of revenue sharing, which provided funds to localities painlessly. That also explains his eagerness to end deductibility, because this would make local taxation hurt much more. Moreover, Mr. Reagan is on record as opposing pay-as-you-go methods of collection; he would rather the taxpayer get slugged once a year, causing John Q. to rise up against the tormentors. His theory is that if taxation hurts, the taxpayer will bring enormous pressure to bear on legislators at ev-ery level to spend less, which in turn will lead to a reversal of the long rise of the invasion of the private sector by public officials. If the additional tax money is not there, goes the Reagan theory, it won't be spent. Makes sense, if you figure that people still act the way sensible people used to act. The only trouble with the Reagan political theory is the end run around the bottom line — borrowing — which defeats his central purpose. His entire philosophy is based on the discipline expected to be enforced by the fear of federal deficits, as well as the fear of excessive local bond issues. But that healthy concern is diminished. Deficits are shrugged off and spending grows apace. The Rea-gan philosophy is foundering on the rock of the confidence he has created. Mr. Reagan is neither conserva-tive, populist nor federalist. He is a governmental minimalist, reliant on a weapon that does not work.

The party elected as its acting leader Surgit Singh Barnala, a former national agriculture minister and an aide to Harchand Singh Longowal, the Sikh leader who was assassinated last week. # In Tel Aviv, a Memorial to Secret Agents

360 Who Lived and Died in Anonymity Are Honored on Labyrinth's Walls

By Thomas L. Friedman

New York Times Service TEL AVIV - Some of them were killed by double agents; others were hanged in the central squares of Damascus or Baghdad, and still others died years ago in circumstances so shrouded in mystery that even today no one will speak about them.

What they all had in common was that they were Israeli spies, secret agents or intelligence analysts who lived and died in anonymity. No longer.

All 360 of their names have been carved into the walls of a memorial center in north Tel Aviv that honors the fallen members of Israel's intelligence agencies, the one branch of the Israeli security forces that has never had a monument.

The site was opened recently to the public, and for anyone interested in espionage the list of names is fascinating reading. The names of some people never before exposed as intelligence officers are on the wall. # In Sudan, New Leaders Battle an Old Civil War

By Clifford D. May

KHARTOUM, Sudan - Immediately after the overthrow of President Gaafar Nimeiri in April, the new Sudanese leaders declared that settling the civil war in the south was their "top priority."

They proclaimed a one-sided cease-fire, promised amnesty to any rebels willing to lay down their arms and offered the religiously and ethnically distinct southern regions increased autonomy.

The new prime minister, Gazouli Dafaa Allah, even sent a personal message to Colonel John Garang, the American-educated head of the rebel group known as the Sudan People's Liberation Army. The prime minister wrote, "Your place is with us here, and it is an honor that must not be missed.". But that and other approaches have failed. After a brief pause, the conflict has widened and worsened. There is more fighting now than there has been in at least a year," a Western diplomat said: ` Rebel forces have been moving steadily north. A week ago they attacked a town less than 300 miles (485 kilometers) south of Khartoum. Earlier this month, there were attacks farther west, in the Nuba Mountains near Kadugli. Several hundred people have been killed. Several thousand have been left homeless.

"The situation is very tense," said the defense minister, Brigadier Osman Abdullah Mohammed.

He said that "huge numbers" of rebel troops had been deployed in spots along the Ethiopian border, and listed some southern towns still held by government forces that now are "completely encircled" by the rebels. Reinforcements are to be sent, Brigadier Mohammed added, in order to enable Sudanese garrisons to "withstand seizure by Garang's troops for a longer time."
Western diplomats in Khartoum said that the rebels' radio station, which broadcasts from inside Ethiopia, was using the same harsh adleader, General Abdul Rahma Swareddahab, that it once reserved for General Nimeiri. The rebel radio also has begun talking not about the "southern" problem but about the "Sudanese" problem. "That seems to suggest that Colonel Garang now sees himself as the leader not only of the south but of the whole country," an embassy official said. Western diplomats said there was a major rebel training camp and base in southwestern Ethiopia near the city of Gambela. Rebel leaders live as guests of the Ethiopian government in and around Ad-

Some Sudanese officials and Western diplomats say they believe that the price the Ethiopian government exacts for its hospitality is substantial influence over Colone Garang and his forces.

As part of the Sudanese-Libyan reconciliation, Colonel Moamer Qadhafi, the Libyan leader, edged to stop financing Colonel Garang's rebels.

But the expansion of the conflict in recent days is evidence that Colonel Garang is not short of equipment and supplies, according to military experts. They say the rebel group can cause extensive damage and disruption.

Jazz Goes to School: 'Lab Bands' Come Out of the Studio

> Dunscomb, director of bands for Purdue University, goes to Montreaux, Switzerland, each summer to direct the jazz festival's student band concerts and workshops. The NAJE, with 6,000 members and six full-time employees, is headquartered in the heartland of the United States - Manhattan, Kansas. Jazz education is an all-American subject, rapidly becoming an industry.

> Increasing quantities of improvising and teaching methods, combo and big band arrangements, magazines and audio-visual material are being published. Dunscomb is writing a directory listing describing and grading them. There are more workshops, seminars and summer band camps all the time, and Down Beat Magazine inaugurated. a student jazz poll this year.

Although many of today's stars, such as Pat Metheny and Michael Brecker, are prod-

They may continue to play jazz for pleasure, they will be able to appreciate it, and they will be in a high enough income bracket to contrib-ute to its viability."

The first university to offer jazz for credit was North Texas State in Denton, in the late 1950s. Other universities organized bands, but the word "jazz" was still unacceptable. They were called "stage" or "lab" bands. (Students were often ejected from campus practice studios for playing jazz in them.) Bandleader Stan Kenton was one of the first professionals to become interested in jazz. education, conducting clinics and organizing stage band" summer camps. Most of the teachers, despite their enthusiasm and love for jazz, were classically trained and had never played jazz professionally. The NAJE was formed 16 years ago to educate jazz educators. Thrown out of work by rock in the 1960s, musicians began to join faculties. People like Jackie McLean, Archie swing such as Afro-American body move-Shepp and Richard Davis became fullfledged teachers.

An alto saxophonist named Jamie Aebersold has released a collection of 45 recordsolo transcriptions, chords and instructions

Aebersold recently donated $600 worth of material to the Polish Jazz Society, and Dunscomb has been working on publishers and record companies to follow that example. With the help of funding from the U.S. Information Agency, he conducted a series of clinics in Poland and Hungary this year.

International jazz education is embryonic. not yet integrated into curricula. "I've gone to many countries and worked with educators, professional musicians and students," Dunscomb said. "It's difficult but we're progressing. I would say that the highest level of student proficiency, and certainly enthusiasm, is in Poland. They are just like sponges. I'm just wasted after clinics there. They have such an urgent desire to learn?

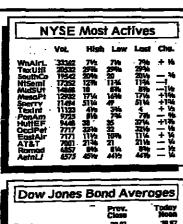

The basic element of jazz called swing is a combination of the African and North American experience; transplanting it is a delicate matter. Dunscomb said other cultures' lack of exposure to manifestations of ment and speech patterns could cause problems, but he added:

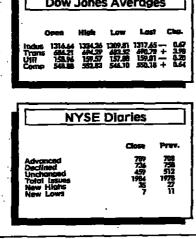

"In a funny kind of way it's not all nega-tive. First of all they do a lot of listening, they ings with professional rhythm sections, com-plemented by method books with sample not being structured on the American pattern thay are developing their own national helping the student improviser to play along. trends, avoiding certain cliches. > Meanwhile, he said, in the United States "the market is now being flooded by pop tunes arranged for jazz bands. There's a good hook there. A kid coming into high school, this is his music. If he can play a Michael Jackson tune in a jazz band then we can take him to the next step. It's healthy if we nurture it properly. The danger is not taking the students past where they already are.

> "Another danger is the increasing number of contests and prizes. There's always this controversy — is competition necessary in the field of culture? Yes, if used properly. It should not be the ultimate goal. We don't want a band to work on three pieces all year and then take them to a contest. Students should get a look at the entire spectrum. Most of all, it should be fun for them."

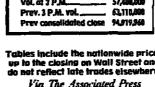

The drummer Elvin Jones once conducted a clinic for more than 300 students in Japan. A journalist asked him where all these fledgling drummers could find work. Jones replied: "You don't have to win the Tour de France to enjoy riding a bicycle."

Trading Is Light on the NYSE

NEW YORK - Prices were slightly lower late Monday in light trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

The Dow Jones industrial average was down

.00 to 1,317.32 an hour before the close. Declines were edging out advances among the 1,917 issues traded. Five-hour volume amounted to about 57.4 million shares, compared with 63.11 million in the same period

Although prices in tables on these pages are from the 4 P.M. close in New York, for time reasons, this article is based on the market at 3 P.M.

"The market's on a holiday," said Alan Ackerman of Herzfeld & Stern. "There's an absence of interest by portfolio managers with the Labor Day weekend coming."

Mr. Ackerman said that, besides the season-like the season-like season-lik

U.S., Swiss Officials Plant
Talks on Better Legal Ties

Remers

ZURICH — U.S. and Swiss officials will hold talks in Bern this week to improve legal cooperation after relations were strained during the affair over Marc Rich, a commodities trader, the government said Monday.

It said that the talks, from Tuesday through Thursday, "should help avoid future legal conflicts between Switzerland and the United States." They are the second in a series of discussions that began in March.

Mr. Rich, a Swiss resident, was the subject of one of the biggest tax-evasion cases in the United States.

U.S. authorities sought documents from his firm, but rather than use existing legal channels for obtaining information with help of the Swiss government they subpoensed papers and imposed a heavy fine on Mr. Rich when he did not comply.

Bern accused Washington of infringing Swiss.

posed a neavy rate on ret. Rich when he did not comply.

Bern accused Washington of infringing Swiss sovereignty and arged the U.S. authorities to request official assistance, a process that the Americans said was too slow.

Chicago Merc, CBOE Move Complaint To Lock Up S&P Indexes

By H.J. MAIDENBERG

EW YORK — When the Chicago Mercantile Exchange announced last week that it planned to introduce futures on an index of over-the-counter stocks this fall, the second-largest futures market again showed that it had not lost its innovative touch. Not only does the Merc plan to trade futures on Standard & Poor's index of 250 industrial stocks, it also plans to link with the Chicago Board Options Exchange's planned options market on the same index. Options Exchange's planned options market on the same index. If the plans are successful it would give the two Chicago exchanges solid holds on what promise to be extremely successful markets on the S&P-250 index futures and options. As it is, both exchanges dominate the futures and options trade in indexes exchanges dominate the futures and options trade in indexes based on New York Stock Exchange issues.
Indeed, the Chicago Merc's S&P-500 index contract is the second most actively traded of all futures. Its volume in July, 1.1 million contracts, was exceeded only by the Chicago Board of Trade's Treasury-bond futures, at 3.3 million contracts.

The CBOE's S&P-100 option, meanwhile, is by far the most active of all options mar-most active of all options markets, with an average of 400,000 contracts traded each day. In fact, the 100-options market has grown so powerful that Wall Street analysts who once considered it the tail on the Big Board's dog now quip that it frequently moves the entire equities market. But Leo Melamed, the former chairman of the Chicago Merc who pioneered the first foreign-currency, interest-rate and index futures on that exchange, believes the over-the-counter equities market will continue to be the fastest growing stock market. "Since 1980, OTC trading has increased 127 percent and now averages 75 percent of the Big Board's daily volume," he observed last week during a visit to New York. He added: "The number of OTC stocks has climbed to over 4,000, from 2,900, in this period, OTC stocks has climbed to over 4,000, from 2,900, in this period, while the Big Board still has about 1,500 listed issues. Clearly, the investors see more potential in OTC stocks than in the more mature companies whose shares are traded on the Big Board."

EANWHILE, William J. Brodsky, the Chicago Merc's president who also came to New York to brief brokerage-house officials on the proposed index futures, said he was impressed during a recent trip through Asia by the strong interest shown by financial institutions there in U.S. futures and

"Many people in and out of our industry complain that the proliferation of new futures and options is diluting all but a few active markets," Mr. Brodsky said. "This is not true, because a growing percentage of our volume, some 30 percent, now comes from abroad. When the Tokyo financial-futures market opens its doors in October, the international hedging and trading will

What also bodes well for the U.S. financial futures and options markets, Mr. Brodsky said, was the emergence of China as an increasingly important global economic power.

"Whether China's financial authorities use our markets to hedge foreign exchange or dollar instruments or let the Japanese act as their brokers, they too will need liquid hedging markets," he said: "It is interesting that the first head of a foreign state to visit an American futures exchange was President Li [Xianman] of China, who toured the Chicago Merc on July 26."

For his part, Mr. Melamed says flatly that in five years, Tokyo

Semiconductor Makers Assailed

By Michael Schrage and Sarah Oates

Washington Part Service
WASHINGTON — Japanese semiconductor manufacturers, responding to a formal U.S. industry complaint that they are engaging in unfair trade practices, denied Mon-day that Japan's markets are closed and called complaints by U.S. chip makers a "red herring" to mask their own deficiencies.

The Semiconductor Industry Association's allegation that U.S. semiconductor producers are de-nied fair access to the Japanese market is a red herring and has no basis in law or reality," said Tomihiro Matsumura, a senior vice pres-ident of Japan's NEC Corp., refer-ring to a trade complaint filed by the U.S. trade group.

Mr. Matsumura, speaking at a press briefing called to elaborate on the Japanese industry's response to the complaint, said, "The Japanese semiconductor market has been completely liberalized for trade and investment for over a decade."

Mr. Matsumura also maintained that the complaint failed to show that the Japanese government had established any unreasonable trade barriers to U.S. semiconductor exports. Similarly, he argued that Japanese semiconductor compa-nies did not discriminate against U.S. companies.

No evidence of actual market barriers has been presented for the simple reason that the market is completely open," he said.

The U.S. Electronics Industry Association, which supported the SIA filing, said it will examine the

According to the Electronics Industries Association of Japan, the Japanese trade group, the SIA's fig-ures are biased because they exclude the so-called "captive" mannfacturers of semiconductors. For example, they said, Interna-tional Business Machines Corp. has a substantial in-house manufacturing capability for silicon chips as does General Motors Corp. In contrast, the Japanese group said, Japan's large captive semiconductor market was included in the SIA estimates.

Broken Hill Broadens Its Horizons

Australia Giant In Oil, Steel

By Hugh D. Menzies

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — They call

Broken Hill Pty. Co. the Big Australian — with good reason. This steel, mining, and oil monolith accounts for 3 percent of Australia's gross domestic product, 5 percent of exports and 10 percent of the value of all absences. cent of the value of all shares listed on the nation's stock ex-changes. On Australia's scale. that's rather like being U.S. Steel Corp., Asarco Inc. and Exxon Corp. rolled into one. Even more impressive, BHP boasts remarkable profitability for a company in such distressed industries. It reported record net income of $546 million on sales of $5 billion for the fiscal year that ended May 31. Those earnings, two-thirds of which stem from Australian oil operations, received an added lift because almost half its sales were made in strong U.S. dollars, while most costs are paid in the much weaker Australian dollar.

But the Big Australian has grown too big for Australia. Not only does it monopolize the steel industry there, but it also produces, in a joint venture with Exxon, most of the oil pumped in Australia and it is a major miner of iron ore, coal and manganese. To grow faster than the nation's economy, the century-old company has decided that it must go multinational.

Thus Broken Hill is drilling for oil off the coast of China, buying control of a huge copper deposit in Chile, and preparing to mine coal and gold in South Africa. But the United States is by far the major target of its thrust abroad.

BHP has been infiltrating the U.S. steel and oil markets for some time, but last year it moved boldly beyond the beachheads. First it bought Utah International Inc., the San Francisco mining concern, from General Electric Co. for $2.6 billion. Then it acquired Energy Reserves Group, a Kansas-based oil and gas pro-ducer, for $500 million. More recently, management spent $13 million to expand the company's steel-processing facilities in the United States, mostly in the

in New Mexico and Australia. But the new division brought' with it some risks: Utah International owns gold and coal deposits in South Africa, as well as large copper holdings in Chile, where foreign-owned mines were nationalized for a while just over a decade ago. The current Chilean government has the welcome mat out, however.

One of the acquisitions is likely to be a U.S. oil property. Phillips Petroleum Co., for one, needs cash to help finance the huge debt it ran up to fight the takeover raid started by T. Boone Pickens, and there is talk that Phillips is looking for buyers for some of its oil reserves. Indeed, despite denials from BHP,

The chief executive of Broken Hill, Brian Loton, says he would like to add to the company's oil and gas reserves in the United States. He said in a telephone interview: "We can get a far better net return on petroleum assets there than in many other countries. The profit motive is still well regarded in the U.S."

Mr. Loton's ability to pull off transactions catabulted the company's asset base in the United States from virtually nothing 16 months ago to 15 percent of total holdings of $8.5 billion. "It (Continued on Page 13, Col. 2)

Mesa Petroleum Plans to Become A Partnership

NEW YORK - Mesa Petroleum Co. said Monday that its board had approved reorganizing the company into a limited partnership. T. Boone Pickens Jr., the founder and chairman of Mesa, would head the partnership.

Under a limited partnership, cash produced by the company's oil and natural gas business would not have to be subjected to a corporate income tax before being available for distribution to shareholders.

Substantially all of the company's oil and gas properties would be transferred to the partnership, the group said. Mesa proposed that shareholders receive one unit representing an interest in the partnership for each share of Mesa stock. The units will be publicly traded. Instead of quarterly stock divi-dends, there would be quarterly distributions of nearly all of the available net cash flow.

Mesa said that it planned to make the first of two distributions of units of the partnership in De-cember and that it planned for Mesa's existence as a corporation to end in 1987, after the second distribution. After the first distribution of partnership units, the company's stock and the partnership's units would trade independently in security markets.

The plan is subject to approval by Mesa's stockholders at a meeting planned for December.

The company also must clear the proposal with its lenders and federal regulators. "Transfer of assets to the limited partnership will provide Mesa shareholders a more direct economic interest in the company's primary asset — its oil and gas reserves. Mr. Pickens said.

"Net available cash flow from the properties, unburdened by income taxes at the corporate level, will be available for distribution to unit holders and will provide substantially higher cash flow than Mesa's current common stock dividend," he added.

Mesa stock shot up $1 to $16.50 a share in the opening hour of New York Stock Exchange trading today following the announcement.

Mesa said the 14.6 million shares of Unocal Corp. it acquired in an unsuccessful takeover bid earlier this year and certain other assets would be retained by the company after the first distribution of partnership units and sold within a

Proceeds of those sales would be used to finance newly issued partnership units that would be distrib-uted to holders of Mesa common stock in the first half of 1987, ending Mesa's corporate existence.

In recent years, Mesa has taken on other large companies in hostile takeovers, gaining huge profits when the target companies either sought higher bids or bought back their own stock.

Mr. Pickens, with $4.2 million in salary and $18.6 million in deferred bonuses stemming from takeover fights, was believed to be the highest-paid executive in the United States last year, Last month, Mesa reported second-quarter earnings of $95.33 mil-lion, or $1.39 a share, down from $230.91 million, or $3.31 a share in the same quarter a year earlier. Revenue slipped 13.6 percent to $87.64 million, from $101.47 mil-

EC Jobless Rate Grew in July

LUXEMBOURG - Unemployment in the European Community rose to 11 percent of the work force in July, the community's statistics organi-zation, Eurostat, reported Mon-day. The jobless figure had been 10.8 percent in June and 10.6 percent in July 1984.

In its monthly bulletin, the agency said 12.4 million people were jobless in July, almost 400,000 more than in June. Seasonally adjusted data showed a mainly downward trend in unemployment among men, but in most member states unemployment among women rose slightly, the agency said. Young peo-ple were also affected by the increase in unemployment.

The statistics excluded Greece for technical reasons.

Black Africa's Debt Crisis Deepens Investment, Earnings, Aid Fall as Interest Payments Mount

By Edward A. Gargan New York Times Service NEW YORK - Sub-Saharan African countries, faced with mounting foreign debts and debt service, are finding it increasingly difficult to repay their loans, raising concerns at the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund as well as among commercial bankers. According to IMF estimates, by the end of last year total debt to foreign creditors owed by all African countries, excluding Libya and South Africa, was $104.3 billion. Some private economists, however, place the debt of the sub-Saharan African countries alone at between $130 billion and $135 billion, a figure these economists say is more realistic than the IMF numbers.

The sub-Saharan region excludes Algeria, Egypt, Libya, Morocco and Tunisia. In addition, South Africa is not treated as part of Africa in economic discussions. The World Bank estimates that this year 38 of the sub-Saharan countries will be required to shoulder $11.1 billion in debt-service payments, nearly double the amount they were required to pay only two years ago.

Indeed, the Organization of African Unity declared in July that most of the continent's countries were approaching "economic col-lapse." And while the organization attributed much blame to "an unjust and inequitable economic sysiem," as well as natural catastrophes such as drought, the 51-member OAU also pointed to "some domestic policy shortcomings" as factors in the economic fragility of many nations.

Although Airica's debt is dwarfed by that of Latin America -Brazil's debt to foreign creditors alone approaches that of all of sub-Saharan Africa - many economists contend that the very fragility of African economies makes it far more difficult for those countries to manage their international obligations than countries such as Mexico, Brazil or Peril

Twelve African nations, including Mali, Niger, Ghana and Ivory Coast, have adopted austerity measures arranged by the IMF. Nonetheless, there is widespread pessimism about African economies and many U.S. commercial banks are quietly beginning to withdraw from involvement in the continent.

At least three countries - Zambia. Sudan and Liberia - are behind on their repayments of loans from the IMF. Nigeria, the largest African debtor with a debt of nearly $21 billion, has avoided incurring debt from the IMF and consequently has also avoided the strictures attached to IMF lending.

a condition rare among African na-One of the things that alarms us," said John M. Underwood, a specialist on external debt at the World Bank, "is that if you look at the total debt service Africa has $5.7 billion. What we're projecting for 1984 is $9.7 billion and for 1985, $11.1 billion."

With this steep jump in debt service, he said, "we just don't think they can manage it without some kind of debt rescheduling."

The economies of most of the sub-Saharan countries have been staggered in the last decade or so by a combination of factors, including sharp increases in oil prices; falling prices for cocoa, groundnuts, coffee and copper, some of the region's key export commodities, and widespread economic mismanage-from the fund. There needs to be a lot of other money coming to help them. They are in the worst shape This need for dramatically enhanced attention to Africa was emphasized by Edward V.K. Jaycox, a vice president of the World Bank, in a speech earlier this month. "Access to new credit and private equity investment has all but dried up and concessional aid has declined," Mr. Jaycox said. "By been paying, it's been running $4 and large, African governments billion, $5 billion. In 1983, it was have failed to adjust their economies, and have therefore been overwhelmed by difficulties."

At the same time, Mr. Jaycox observed, "we now estimate that on a net basis the capital flows to Africa in the period 1985-89 will be less than one-half the net flows during the period 1980-84. We do not foresee any dramatic improvement in terms of trade or export possibilities that can offset this reduction in net capital flows."

In response to this gloomy picture, the World Bank, according to Mr. Jaycox, "has put sub-Saharan Africa at the top of its priority list." While the debt picture for Africa appears increasingly bleak, some bankers and African experts believe that if given enough time, most African countries can strengthen their economies and accommodate foreign lenders.

"It's not a question of whether they will meet their obligations or not, with the exception perhaps of Mozambique," said Jeffrey L.

He added: "It's mostly a matter of sub-Saharan countries being granted rescheduling of their debt service. Our feeling here is that unless they get some breathing space, they will never grow and will never get out from under their debt bur-den."

The bank added that net securities sales appeared to accelerate in July because of the violent protests against the white-minority government's apartheid policies, the state of emergency declared July 21 and an intensified campaign abroad seeking the reduction of investments in South Africa.

There was a net inflow of long-term funds to the public sector in the second quarter, leaving a net long-term capital inflow of 104 million rands, down from 355 million in the first quarter, the bank said. its business cycle indicator suggested that the current downswing had not yet reached its lowest point. # Orders Fall Tools in U.S.

New York Times Service NEW YORK -- Orders for U.S.made machine tools declined to slightly more than $200 million in July, a drop of 14.6 percent from the previous month and 35.9 percent from July 1984, according to a report released Monday by the industry's trade association.

Cumulative orders for the first seven months of 1985 also eased. slipping 6.4 percent from the same period last year, to $1.57 billion, according to the National Machine Tool Builders' Association. Machine tools are power-driven devices that cut or form metal.

Shipments followed a similar pattern, dropping to $189.6 million, down 20.7 percent from June and 2.1 percent from a year ago. However, cumulative shipments through July totaled $1.31 billion. up 7.6 perceut.

"While we hope that the second half of 1985 will show some pickup in industry activity, it looks like buying plans have been put on hold for now," said James A. Gray, president of the association.

"I'm not too concerned about the decline in shipments because most builders traditionally shut down for vacations in July and August," he added.

Christine Chien, an analyst with Prudential-Bache Securities Inc., agreed that "seasonally, July and August are not strong months But, on the other hand," she said, "when you're looking at numbers that are pretty low, the declines should not be pronounced.

Domestically, things just aren't very good." Tool makers and industry analysts said foreign competition remains the major factor in the slump. About half of the machine tool imports in the United States come from Japan, with the remainder supplied by West Germany, Taiwan and South Korea. "We've had zero growth in exports for the past three years, while imports are surging ahead - making up more than 40 percent of domestic consumption," said Joseph Franklin, statistical director for the association. "The domestic industry is crippled, and I don't foresee any drastic recovery in the months ahead." he added. Miss Chien of Prudential-Bache said: "Imports continue strong and pricing is pretty weak. Only two sectors — aerospace and automo-tive — are buying. The economy will continue to grow, but manufacturing will certainly not be the

The company contritely said it had dispatched managers around the world to re-examine safety pro-Union Carbide has a problem;

Union Carbide will clean it up, said Robert D. Kennedy, president of the company's chemicals and plastics division. But the company has problems on several fronts. Lawsuits filed on behalf of the victims in India and West Virginia seek damages amounting to bil-lions of dollars. The company's negotiations with the Indian government, aimed at reaching an out-of-court settlement with the Bhopal victims, have broken off. Lawyers say Union Carbide's disclosures about the Institute accident have weakened its legal defense in all the cases, in West Virginia and in India.

"As a plaintiff's attorney, I'm amazed by their admissions," said Aaron J. Broder, a partner in the New York law firm of F. Lee Bailey & Aaron J. Broder. "I see no defense on the question of negligence.

In Congress, proposals for increased regulation of chemical plants are gaining support. On Wall Street, Union Carbide is increasingly viewed as vulnerable to either a takeover attempt or a proxy fight that would force it to sell off some its best lines of busi-

And while the company is burdened by all these external threats. one of its biggest problems is internal. Even before the Bhopal acci-

Analysts say that now, just at the time when the attention of its management is being diverted, Union Carbide needs to sell assets, lay off workers and cut costs sharply to become more profitable. Among the assets that should be sold, the analysts say, are several petrochemical plants that are facing increased compention from foreign producers, and several other lines of chemicals and plastics.

"Carbide's problem isn't Institute," said Leonard Bogner of First Manhattan Co. "It's how to fix the rest of Carbide."

For major U.S. corporations, particularly those that sell most of their products to other large companies, the impact of a tarnished public image is impossible to measure; it is often exaggerated by the press. But Union Carbide has dearly suffered. Not only have its accidents received worldwide attention but they have come at a time of growing public debate over corporate accountability. Just last week, besides the Union Carbide disclosures, A.H. Robins Co. filed for protection from its creditors under the U.S. Bankruptcy Code to deal with numerous claims related to the Dalkon Shield, and Eli Lilly & Co. pleaded guilty to charges that it had failed to tell the government about deaths and illnesses related to its drug Orallex.

"These three companies are known for the quality of their science. Accidents result from a failure to act on knowledge they already have," said Ellen Silbergeld, a toxicologist and senior scientist with the Environmental Defense Fund. She said mounting public criticism would lead to larger claims for damages and greater support for government regulation. For Union Carbide, few expect the accidents in India and West Virginia to lead to bankruptcy.

"People thought the problems of Bhopal would peak and go away. They haven't," said Anantha Raman, a chemical-industry analyst. "I still don't think bankruptcy is something to worry about but the odds have increased."

In those golden decades before 1980, the union was often the pace-setter for industrial America, with other unions striving to match the contracts won by the UAW.

Lately, though, the trend has been the other way. The union granted wage and benefit concessions to Chrysler Corp. in 1979 to help keep the auto concern from bankruptcy, and in 1982, under the pressure of a severe recession,

Party Feud Splits Greek Opposition The Associated Press

ATHENS — Constantine Mitso-takis, leader of Greece's major opposition party, has resigned following a dispute within the party. But he said he would seek re-election at a party meeting Thursday.

Mr. Mitsotakis, 67, resigned Sat-urday and called for his New Democracy Party to elect a new leader. Constantine Stephanopoulos, the party's parliamentary representative, was expected to seek the leadership. But he said Sunday that he would not be a candidate and assailed Mr. Mitsotakis's decision as an "unprovoked challenge" to party unity.

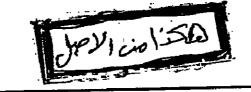

Observers said the crisis could split New Democracy, leaving Prime Minister Andreas Papan-dreon with no effective opposition in the 300-member parlish

VW Expects Sales to Rise 12% in '85

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches DETROIT - Volkswagen AG expects its worldwide sales in 1985 year to about 24 million vehicles, pushing net profits above last year's 228 million Deutsche marks ($82.9 million), the company's managing board chairman said

"We're producing 800 more cars daily this year than last year," Carl Hahn, the chairman, said Last year, VW's sales totaled more than 2.14 million vehicles.

Mr. Hahn also said VW saw its net profits in the second six months of this year improving from last year's results, continuing a trend shown in the first half. He noted that VW, the world's fifth largest automaker, has achieved car sales leadership in its principal market of Europe for the first time in the first half of 1985. "It looks good in the second half,

He said the sales outlook in Europe in coming months is brighter as a result of the settlement of a controversy over auto-exhaust

Asked about the outlook for the U.S. market, Mr. Hahn said he expected next year's auto market to be level with this year's, but he said the outlook was better for European luxury cars, such as VW's Audi products and its exports in the $10,000 category, such as the Jetta.

Speaking in Detroit at the opening of the Tenth Annual Automotive News World Congress, Mr. Hahn urged the U.S. industry to take the initiative to develop Third World nations, which represent a vast, untapped market.

Latin America's combined population of more than 400 million is a huge potential market but only if ing is done to stimulate that ), continent's economy and help in its debt situation, he added.

Mr. Hahn also said that China is tipe for some large-scale investment and venture arrangements and called Mexico a "Canada-type of manufacturing base" that will be utilized by domestic U.S. and Japanese companies to benefit American consumers.

Henkel to Offer Shares To Public for First Time

BONN - Henkel KGAA, the family-owned West German chemicals group, said Monday that it will rise almost 12 percent from last the first time in its 109-year history. will offer shares to the public for

The company, best known for its Persil washing powder, said it will sell 1.5 million shares on German stock exchanges in early October. Banking sources estimate that the issue could raise almost 400 million Deutsche marks ($145 million) in new capital.

Henkel is the fourth-biggest West German chemical producer. The flotation, approved at a se-continue to hold all voting shares. Henkel, which operates in 45 countries and employs about 31,000 people worldwide, said an increase in its capital linked to the share issue opened up new possibilities for expansion.

A spokesman said the company had specific projects in mind, but declined to give details. Henkel executives have said in the past they are eager to strengthen U.S. opera-

Banking sources said they expected the shares to be priced at around 260 DM, which would bring in 390 million DM.

The issue comes in a year when Henkel expects a marked improvement in profits following a reorganization in 1984 that included the sale of money-losing subsidiaries.

Last year it increased after-tax profit by 26 percent to 130 million DM on worldwide sales of 9.34 billion DM.

The company was set up in 1876 by Fritz Henkel. It achieved a ma-jor breakthrough in 1907 when Hugo Henkel, the founder's son, developed Persil, said by the company to be the first powder that could wash clothes clean without housewives having to scrub out the

Japanese Weigh U.S. Chip Output

TOKYO - Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. of Japan said Monday that it was considering production of semiconductors in the United States as part of its long-term business strategy.

"The time has come for us to study U.S. production [of mi-crochips], a spokesman said. But he denied reports in the financial daily Nihon Keizai Shimbun that said the group would build a plant in the U.S. Midwest in early 1987, Monthly output of the reported plant was put at 10 million chips, mainly for use in Matsushita color TV sets and video-tape recorders. We have not decided anything on the timing, scale, investment and operation formulas," the spokesman said.

Named after two of its constituents, perborate and silicate, Persil became Henkel's best-known product and remains the market leader in West Germany today.

Since World War II. Henkel has diversified away from its traditional cleaning agents business. Its product line now includes adhesives, cosmetics and personal hygiene products.

Fall in DM Bond Yields Roils Market

By Allan Saunderson

THE EUROMARKETS

FRANKFURT - The acceleration of the Deutsche-mark bondyield decline last week has thrown the market into uncertainty, and syndication managers were sharply divided on the effect of the slide on the September Eurobond calendar for West Germany. The calendar was expected to be announced as early as Wednesday.

Anticipation now centers on an issue volume of probably about 2 billion DM or slightly higher, well above August's 1.51 billion DM. The potential of the DM to rise further against the dollar was the key to decisions by corporate treasurers about whether to raise funds in West Germany at present, the managers said. Syndication managers were di-vided on the effect of currencymarket developments on the size of the new calendar.

About a half dozen leading syndication managers canvassed by Reuters reflected this division, but more than half said that they expected the September calendar would be fairly busy after the modest issue volume seen in the sum-mer. Borrowers had registered issues for 1.83 billion DM in July.

In April, DG Bank lead-managed a 200-million-DM and 60million European-currency-unit is-sue for the World Bank, which simultaneously launched issues in Swiss francs, guilders and Austrian

One U.S. bank branch syndication head said that a surge of new issues should be registered for September, in view of the DM being up strongly from lows against the dollar at the end of February.

"I would guess that it [issue volume] would more likely be above 2.5 [billion] than below," the U.S. syndication head said. The danger of the dollar collapsing by as much as a 1 DM is well past now that the U.S. currency has fairly moderately slid from its highs above 3.47 DM earlier this year, he said.

A manager for a major West German bank pointed to a survey in Friday's Boersen-Zeitung business newspaper that showed an average expectation that public-au-Sources Monday were expecting thority bond yields, as calculated the World Bank to finish up this daily by the Bundesbank, would month's calendar with an offering end the year at about 6.35 percent.

Although the 12 bond-market specialists canvassed by the newspaper expected further yield declines before year end, general opinion was that the room for further dramatic slides was now considerably limited.

Syndication managers said that unless borrowers have, like multinational companies, a constant need for DM funds, they would balance initial costs against risks of higher repayment costs. 'I don't know how much longer corporate treasurers are going to want to wait, whether that 4 point in the final analysis makes that much difference," the West Ger-man bank syndication manager

The managers said some unforeseen factors could also emerge in currency markets, suddenly reversing the DM's rise against the dollar and putting renewed upward pressure on yields in West Germany.

A second manager for a U.S.-based bank in Frankfurt said, however, that feeling was running strongly that the DM would rise to at least 2.60 against the dollar. Most borrowers would therefore wait until cost of funds has dropped further.

LONDON - For eight weeks Lord Hanson, chairman of Hanson Trust PLC, one of Britain's mostadmired and feared corporate raiders, has countered speculation that the proceeds of a $725-million share issue would either be used to purchase another British group or left earning a useful return on the money markets.

It has, after all, become fashionable in Britain for companies to raise money cheaply from their shareholders and use it in the short term to benefit from high interest

Lord Hanson was quite definite about his intentions at the shareholders' meeting that approved the issue. His favorite occupation is still stalking traditional industries. His ideal takeover target, he said, would be a U.S. company similar in scope to United States Industries, the consumer, buildings and industrial-products group for which Hanson Trust paid almost $400 million a year ago.

Lord Hanson, 63, ended the speculation last week. The astute businessman, whose company's first business venture was renting out coal sacks and selling fertilizers, set his sights on his biggest ever transaction, offering an initial $60 in cash a share for SCM Corp., which values it at $745 million.

Hanson confirmed Monday that it had started its tender offer. SCM's board, meeting on Sunday, unanimously rejected the offer and authorized the exploration of a possible leveraged buyout and other ways of maximizing values to holders.

"It is in the mold of Hanson acquisitions: SCM is exactly the kind of company that he goes for." said Robert Morton, an analyst for De Zoete & Bevan, a London stockbrokerage. "Like his other recent U.S. acquisition, United States Industries, it is a company which has already undergone a great deal of rationalization and sorting-out, which perhaps was not fully realized by the shareholders."

Although the Chicago Board of and the Chicago Merc have long been viewed as rivals, the fact is that their backgrounds have led them into two different kinds of futures and options markets, Mr. Melamed noted.

Perhaps because the Chicago Board of Trade has long been the dominant market in wheat, corn, and soybeans, all of which are storable products, it has favored longer-term financial futures such as those in Treasury bonds, Government National Mortgage Association certificates and, most recently.

$100-million loser in 1983 to a $90million gainer last year. That turnaround was made possible by an agreement struck with the Australian government, which decided that 85 percent of the Australian steel market should be the province of the domestic companies - in effect, BHP. Also, the Big Australian was permitted by the government to slice the fat from its operations: Plants were shut and 14,000 off. With imports hamstrung and chief executive title last year. Though arguably the most important corporate officer in Australia, Mr. Loton is not particularly well known. He rarely grants interviews and adopts a formal manner in public. Mr. Reef, the consultant, described him as lacking the blend of presence and easy charm that marked his predecessors.

When Sir James McNeill stepped down as chairman in mid-1984, Mr. Loton did not get the title. The board gave it to one of its own, Sir James Balderstone, a worldly executive with ties to Australian Mutual Provident Society, the largest institutional holder of BHP shares.

Mr. Loton's strong position at Sir Thorley Loton, and Sir Ian kept the newly founded Melbourne New South Wales outback. The company eventually moved into iron ore and coal mining and thence into steelmaking. By the outbreak of World War II, it was a potent industrial force.

During the 1960s, BHP was quick to stake a claim in the huge iron ore deposits discovered in western Australia. That ore brought handsome prices from Ja-pan's steel industry. Shortly afterward, management gambled on a geologist's belief that oil lay beneath Bass Strait, which separates Tasmania from mainland Australia. BHP struck oil on the first try, a decade later, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries sent oil prices shooting up.

But Bass Strait oil production is about to peak. And although it is a partner in a $9.8-billion natural gas project off northwestern Australia, BHP has failed to make another big oil strike in its home country. Mr. Loton is betting a bundle that the BHP took exactly 100 years to Big Australian will have better luck ecutive, knew Mr. Loton's father, reach multinational status. In 1885 in the United States.

PETE TOWNSHEND is best known as the songwriter and lead guitarist for now disbanded rock group The Who, primary author of the rock opera "Tommy" and the man who wrote the line "Hope I die before I get old" (which appeared on The Who album "My Generation" two decades ago). He has had something of a literary career as well: Besides owning a bookshop called the Magic Bus, he ran a small press called Eel Pie and he is an associate editor at Faber & Faber. In this, his first published volume of prose, he writes, each first published volume of prose, he writes, each chapter "deals with one aspect of my struggle to discover what beauty really is."

That vague, pretentious statement probably sums up the experience of reading "Horse's Neck" as well as anything else: Like The Who albums "Tommy" and "Quadrophenia," the book is an anomalous, idiosyncratic volume, beld together many but the worker many but the statement of the held together more by the author's sensibility, and certain recurrent preoccupations and images, than conventional narrative strategies. it's neither a novel nor a collection of short stories, neither a fully imagined work of fiction nor a memoir, though the behind-the-scenes bickering that was part of the band's daily existence surfaces in angry, tension-filled scenes between characters in the book, just as The Who's onstage theatrics — its 1960s shows ended with the players smashing their instruended with the players smasting their instru-ments to bits — are mirrored in Townshend's proclivity for melodrama and hyperbole.

On one level, "Horse's Neck" fuzzly re-counts the coming of age of a young musician, his problems with drugs and alcohol and his efforts to escape, but it undermines the docu-mentary interest of such a story and the read-er's symmathy for its characters by continuous. re's sympathy for its characters by continuously shifting narrative gears, splitting ap individual characters into a handful of incarnations, confusing the reader with bizaire, dreamlike digressions.

Despite the repeated references to borses we're never given a hint of what the title means or how it connects to Townshend's other con-

Townshend possesses an instinctive feel for mythicizing the stuff of real life —an ability to take personal emotions and shatter and reas-semble them in more abstract configurations. But while this impulse can result - in such chapters as "Champagne on the Terraces" and "Fish Shop" — in some dramatic set pieces, it is too often directed toward such adolescent subjects as getting high or having a one-night

There is a great deal of such complaining in "Horse's Mouth." Townshend's characters apparently do not have much tolerance for young people ("they scramble the innate rhythmic response granted man by a generous God, with getting high in smoke-filled discos, or throwing Coke cans and firecrackers at stadium concerts"), for women ("she had been like a chal-lenging whipped-cream and icing-bag job in a (confectioner's window") or their own spoiled lives ("Sometimes I unagine what it must be like to sleep where rats run, where insects crawl. over you and into your coat, where the night-marish visions are real and not delirium brought on by self-indulgence"). These sentiments are not dissimilar to ones expressed by some of Townshend's lyrics, but, at least, on the better records, they were counterpointed by the music's aggressive and energetic drive.

Budd Sets Mark in 5,000

LONDON - Zola Budd set a world record of 14 minutes and 48.07 seconds in the women's 5,000 meter run here Monday, slicing more than ten seconds off the old mark of 14.58.89.

The 19-year-old South African-born runner, now a British citizen, raced away from Norwegian Ingrid Kristiansen, who set the record last year, during an international meet. Kristiansen finished second in 14:57.43, also inside her old mark.

but word of her entry was suppressed for fear of an anti-apartheid demonstration; her homeland is barred from international sport because of its policy of racial separation, known as apartheid. The announcement that she would compete was not made until just before Monday's meet began. A crowd of 12,000 at the Crystal Palace Stadium saw the barefoot Budd's performance, but an estimated 3,000 more arrived after it was all over. Doug Goodman, head of the British Athletics Promotion Unit said: "Zola has been the target for anti-apartheid demonstrators this season and we were worried it would happen again. "We had to take a calculated risk - either to make an announcement well in advance and run the risk of trouble, or allow her to compete knowing that there would be no pressure. It was regrettable that some spectators missed her race, but we don't feel that we cheated them. We had to weigh the pros and cons of the situation." Budd and Kristiansen had decided before the race to share the pace-making and, after quickly pulling away from the rest of the field, they played cat-and-mouse for eight of the 12 laps. But then Budd moved clear and won by about 70 meters.

Although criticism and controversy have dogged her career since she became a Briton last year (in time to compete in the 1984 Summer Olympic Games), Budd received a standing ovation on her lan of honor.

Some of Budd's track appearances have been marred by anti-apartheid demonstrations, but her Olympic final clash with U.S. favorite Mary Decker attracted even more attention.

In the 3,000-meter race the two tangled legs; the American crashed out of the race and was left sobbing and injured on the infield while Budd, amid a storm of booing, continued to finish sev-

Budd's international career almost ended when she returned to her homeland, but she was persuaded to return to Britain and this year has won her first-ever indoor race, her first national title and also the world cross-country crown.

Nine days ago she won the Europa Cup 3,000 meters in Moscow, and in Zurich last Wednesday she was narrowly beaten in the mile by Decker, who set a world record, and Olympic 3,000-meter champion Maricica Puica.

Monday's performance will not earn Budd the £50,000 pounds (about $70,000) being offered by a champagne company for a world record set in Britain by a British athlete because the 5.000 is not an Olympic event for women.

Late Surge Rallies Angels Past Error-Prone Tigers

Countled by Our Stall From Depatches ANAHEIM, California - Seldom is one game in a 162-game schedule a true reflection of two teams' seasons. But such a game was played here Sunday as the California Angels overcame the Detroit Tigers 7-1.

The division-leading Angels, after staying close on the combined pitching of Jim Slaton and Stewart Cliburn, scored seven runs in the last three innings for their 34th comeback victory of the season. And the Tigers, the defending World Series champions, added five more errors to their leagueleading total.

"We haven't done anything right all year," said Detroit Manager Sparky Anderson. "This wasn't a one-day affair - not after 121 errors. I don't know what we're going his major league-leading RBI total to do about it."

Jim Slaton, with effectiveness that belied his 1-7 record since mid-May, limited Detroit to Alan Trammell's sixth-inning home run until giving way to Cliburn with two outs in the sixth. Reliever Stewart Cliburn held the Tigers hitless the rest of the way to pare his team-leading earned-run average

Gooden Youngest Pitcher Ever to Win 20 Games

NEW YORK - Dwight Gooden doesn't take to pitching in a tropical rain forest. He had trouble getting a grip in Sunday's dampness, slinging the ball wildly in the general direction of home plate and even third base at one particularly slippery moment.

"I just couldn't find my rhythm," Gooden said. "The ball wasn't rubbed up enough." He was so thrown off his game by the showers and the wet grounds that he lasted only six innings, struck out only four San Diego Padres and gave up five hits. A thoroughly un-Gooden perfor-

But after he'd departed, he was the beneficiary of five insurance runs and became the winning pitcher for the 20th time in 23 decisions this season.

With the 9-3 triumph, Gooden became the youngest major-league pitcher ever to win 20 games in a year. In 1939, Bob Feller of Cleveland won his 20th at the age of 20 years, 10 months and 5 days; Gooden was 20 years, 9 months and 9 days old as he sloshed his way to victory Sunday. Christy Mathewson had held the National League record, winning his 20th at 21 years, 1 month and 9 days back in 1901.

Gooden also won his 14th straight decision, the longest winning streak in the major leagues this year, and four better than the previous Met record of 10, by Tom Seaver in 1969. In a season of records — Tom Seaver's 300th victory, Rod Carew's 3,000th base hit and Pete Rose chasing Ty Cobb's record for total hits - Gooden's accomplishment only accentuates that baseball continues to come up with heroes to match the greatest names in its history: Mathewson, Cobb, Feller, Carew, Seaver, Rose, Gooden.

Gooden was up against two opponents: the defending league champions and a steady rain.
If the Mets didn't have Gooden going (and a hage advance sale for another giveaway day—looseleaf folders for all resident scholars), the game might easily have been called off before fans ever left for Shea Stadium. But the money was in the till, and management forecasts of diminishing showers.

It was still pouring when the Mets should have been taking infield practice, but Gooden did not seem nervous about going for the earli-est 20th-victory season in history. He strolled around the clubhouse with teammates and reporters leaving him pretty much alone. "You don't want to be priming him too much," said catcher-psychologist Gary Carter, a few lockers away. "You don't want him to be thinking about the weather too much. But it had to be tough on him, thinking we might not get it in."

Gooden said later: "I just prepared myself as if we were going to start on time." The rain let up by game time.

The Padres were slip-sliding away in the first inning, giving up three watermarked runs, and the day seemed made for a pitcher who could strike out batters and not put the ball in play too many times. In his last start, Gooden had struck out 16 San Francisco Giants, but Sunday he threw two wild pitches in the third inning, after making only three all season. He also made a throwing error after fielding a bunt and trying to throw out a runner at third base when there was no force play.

"Garv yelled 'third' and I just rushed my throw," he said later. "It was a good call. I had

Carter went out to the mound to talk to Gooden: "I was trying to pump him up a little. I was afraid it might affect his concentration when he threw the ball away. He was upset. He takes pride in his fielding."

Gooden's wild third inning helped the Padres score twice, and the Mets were still leading, 4-3, when Manager Dave Johnson used a pinchhitter for Gooden in the sixth.

"He didn't have his good control," Johnson said. "I didn't want to push him. I'm sure he could have given me another inning or two, but he had thrown 90-some pitches already, on top of the 149 against the Giants, so I just said, That's enough.

And how did Gooden react to being lifted And now all Gooden Teat. We want after six innings? Just how any emerging young hero, in the mold of Mathewson and Feller and Seaver, would. Said Johnson: "He just nodded."

In the articles, two admitted drug abusers, Tim Raines and Lonnie Smith, with admirable a candor and detail, described the

The reason he dove headfirst is that he did not want to leave his stash of cocaine in his locker or his jacket while he was in the game, so he carried it with him in a vial while he was running the bases. Some players have carried the effect of the drug with them on the field: the heightened sense of selfawareness, the grandiosity, into which drug abusers retreat. Lost in themselves, they can think only of protecting their stash. Or perhaps while they are thinking about whether they can manage a snort in the bathroom before the next inning, they are picked off first base flat-footed. Their brains are fried; their competitive edge is gone, perhaps never to return. There are hardheads who believe that all druggies are alike, that all abusers should be banned, that rehabilitation is a fraud, that reform is suspect. At the very least, the witness of Raines and Smith is evidence that some players can make it back, day by day, but their testimony should scare the daylights out of their colleagues, and the rest

The failure of the Expos to achieve their World Series potential in the early '80s is too recent to forget. I remember being in the Montreal dressing room before a game in 1980, and receiving an impassioned interview from one of its players, whose verbal skills were in better shape than his motor skills. I never even considered he might be on an induced high, but I remembered that interview on the day he dropped out of the league a few

For those of us who wouldn't know cocaine from celery salt, awareness comes slowly and surprisingly. I remember writing a column about a relief pitcher who loafed through the early innings but became a fire-breathing monster in the late innings, according to his admiring teammates. In last week's articles I learned that relief pitchers can time their cocaine usage late in the game to be soaring when they are called upon to save a

_Peter Ueberroth, the commissioner of baseball, has ordered mandatory drug tests for baseball personnel, who are surely not immune from abuse, but his principal target happens to be out of his reach: the players. There is currently an agreement between labor and management in which clubs can request voluntary testing for suspect players, and a neutral panel of three doctors who will judge whether players need treatment. The system seems to have been a convenient channel for supervising a few problem players, and scaring a lot

There is already mandatory testing for drugs at the Olympic Games. At World Cup soccer matches, two players from each team are selected at random at a drug station in the runway from the field. The idea of occasional mandatory testing has always seemed anathema to any notion of personal liberty, but what do you do when an entire profession is plagued by a Baseball players are not exactly like airline pilots or school teachers or any other anonymous body of workers. They are highly visible and highly rich; they attract leeches who want to siphon off some of the money and the fame. The fact that no players have been indicted in the current Pittsburgh investigation is not necessarily unfair, law officers tend to go after the supply structure rather than the consumers in major drug cases. Athletes are not, and should not be, immune from prosecution for criminal possession, but in the long run, the chore of drug supervision rests

Teleprompter Wins Arlington Million

CHICAGO (AP) - Teleprompter, a 14-1 shot from England, led all the way Sunday to win the fifth running of the Arlington Million, edging hard-charging favorite Greinton by three-quarters of a length.

Trained by John Watts and ridden by Tony Ives, the 5-year-old

Teleprompter negotiated the mile-and-a-quarter turi course in two minutes, three and two-fifths seconds to take down the top prize of $600,000. Greinton, under Laffit Pincay Jr., made a great charge down the stretch but was unable to overtake the leader. Flying Pidgeon was third and King of Clubs finished fourth in the 13-horse field. Called "the English John Henry" because he is a gelding, Teleprompter

AKRON, Ohio (AP) - Roger Maltbie cruised to a 4-stroke victory here Sunday in the World Series of Golf.

Malthie, 34, who broke a 9-year victory drought earlier this season. shot a front-running. 4-under-par 66 and acquired the the most prestigious title of his 11-year career with a 269 total, 11 strokes under par on the 7,173-yard Firestone Country Club course.

Denis Watson, who entered the final round tied for the lead with Maltbie, dropped long birdie putts on the 11th and 13th holes to close to within a shot of the lead, but a double bogey at No. 14 put him three behind with four holes to play. Watson finished in par-70 for second place. Tom Kite (a closing 68) and Calvin Peete (67) shared third at 273.

Curtis Strange, with a 286 total that tied him for 32d place in the 41man international field, won $6,750 to set a single-season money-winning record for the PGA tour. His winnings for the year come to $534,331.

'A Generation of Poets'

By Jackson Diehl
Washington Post Service
JAROCIN, Poland — A scream swept across a field packed with teen-agers bristling with black leather, chains and tortured hair. "Prohibit work; prohibit pay," was the cry. "People are dying."

Thus began the final concert of the Jarocin rock music festival, a celebration of loud guitars, exotic styles and aggressive alienation that has become a remarkable forum of independent expression for Poland's young generation.

Thousands of youth came to party, camp, and cheer bands who sang of hopelessness, aimlessness and fear of nuclear war. "No goal, no future, no hope, no joy: that's the picture of our generation. went one lyric.

Such themes blared out from Jarocin, a small town in Poland's farmlands, for five long nights this month, to the bemusement of Communist authorities and emissaries of the Roman Catholic Church. Bands performed under such names as Jail, Trial and Dead Scab

The audience dressed according to clan: There were skinheads in leather and chains, punks in black lipstick and dyed, teased hair, and even a few hippies in T-shirts and

The Jarocin festival has become both a rare Polish outlet for social and economic frustration and a barometer of youth coming of age after the Solidarity era.

"We are creating national cul-ture, like it or not," said Walter Chelstowski, a festival organizer. "A generation of poets is being born here with strong ties to reality." The youth attracted to this movement are mostly from working-class families. They say in polls very authentic things in what they that they are frustrated with life, alienated by schools and jobs, fearful about the future.

"For them, rock seems to be the Blues Festival in Olsztyn only alternative," said an organizer of the festival, which began in 1980. "After martial law was introduced [in 1981], rock became special because it was the only youth activity that was not prohibited."

The young are a special concern for the government of General Wojciech Jaruzelski and for the opposition. The party's Central Committee has held two meetings in the sition activists have urged special efforts to win over young Poles. Neither side seems to have had much success. To judge from polls carried out at the festival, many Polish youth simply feel adrift. For many participants, the attraction of Jarocin seemed to be its removal from the restrictions and institutions of everyday life. "Here, I can forget about everything," said Wojciech Raubo, 19, a student and heavy-metal fan. "I can express myself completely." Critics say the authorities tolerate the festival as a way of distracting and manipulating youth. In re-cent years, however, official disquiet with Jarocin has surfaced in a series of measures to control the event, including censorship of some lyrics, a ban on alcohol and a requirement that all concert-goers wear photo identification cards.

The church has also had uncertain results trying to reach the rock fans. Andrzej Madej, a monk, spent a week with 100 volunteers seeking to entice youth to a local church for ilms, Masses and free food.

His most conspicuous reward was a request by the leader of a group of 500 punk fans that a "punks only" Mass be celebrated at midnight. The punk leader de-manded that Madej deliver a homily saying that "punks have to be united at all times," Madej said. "His problem was that when his punks got into fights, some of them were running away."

Madej said he complied with the request, only to be faced with a tough flock who stamped the floor, waved their arms and shouted at him throughout the service. "If it were up to me, I would be against the festival," he said. "But there are do, and we have to try and support them. Here these youth are able to fully realize themselves."

Polish blues, eclipsed by rock in the 1970s, is enjoying a revival. The Associated Press reports from Olsztyn, a 14th-century city 215 kilometers (135 miles) north of Warsaw. The second annual Olsztyn Blues Nights, a four-day, government-financed festival orga-

Students' Association, drew thousands of youths. Art Buchwald is on vacation.

"And in the conflict between radio and writing, radio being kind of like a warm bath and writing being like a cold shower, I arrived at doing this monologue on Saturday nights, about 15 to 20 minutes in length. For me, the monologue was the favorite thing I had done in radio. It was based on writing, but in the end it was radio, it was standing up and leaning forward into the dark and talking, letting words come out of you. limits television. It makes everything that happens exactly that

"Radio, depending on what's there, how you listen to it, how you feel about it - radio can fill up the entire room. It can be immense. Radio, as you sit and focus in on something that comes from it, isn't the size of the receiver. Your image is not limited to that. It can be as big as the world."

Keillor draws most of his material from his own experience. The residents of Lake Wobegon, he said "include almost all the people I've known in my life. The town also incorporates most of what has ever happened to me."

He considers himself very much a person with a small-town sensibility, very much in tune with the virtues of small-town America and very much a part of Lake Wobegon (population 942), where much of the day you could stand in the middle of Main Street and not be in anyone's way.

As Keillor wrote in his new book: "Left to our own devices, we Wobegonians go straight for the small potatoes. Majestic doesn't appeal to us; we like the Grand Canyon better with Clarence and Arlene parked in front of it, smiling. We feel uneasy at momentons events."

"It's a town that becomes more real to me as time goes by." he said. "It becomes real to me as a place that I have left. I have lived in St. Paul for about 12 years, and I believe I'll probably live in St. Paul for a long time, as least as long as I keep on doing this show. But I can imagine a time in the future when I might go back to Lake Wobegon to live.

"One of the themes of the stories is the theme of small pleasures, and one thing I've tried to give myself over to in the course of telling these stories is to stand in praise of common and modest things. And that really is at the heart of Lake Wobegon - the pleasure of porches, and small conversation, and fresh vegeta-bles, the pleasure of winter, the pleasure of the familiar, every year, coming around and around. And a person could make a life of his musical career. It was the first time he had played a New York club since his quintet left the Embers on 52d Street in 1954. The Blue Note had a full house every night Shaw, 75, said the crowd took everything we could give them and asked the band to stretch out more in improvisations. Shaw won fame as a clarinetist in the 1930s and '40s and his band recorded many hits, including "Begin the Beguine," "Summertime" and "Indian Love Call." At the height of his popularity, he discarded the clarinet and said he would never play it again. He's kept that vow; in the new group, Dick John-son handles clarinet and leads the band in Shaw's absence. Shaw said he organized the group in December 1983 to keep a vital kind of American music alive. But he said.

James Irwin, leading a six-man expedition, has embarked on his fourth effort to find Noah's Ark on Mount Ararat Turkish mountain troops are escorting the former U. S. astronaut Irwin and five other Christian fundamentalists on a four-day climb. The team has been advised not to spend nights at camps on Ararat's southwest face, where foreign climbers have been harassed by what the government said were Kurdish separatists.

"If the audiences keep going to

there is a very dim future for us."

Only a tiny fraction of the money raised in the Live Aid concerts for African famine relief has been used and no food or medicine has been shipped, Live Aid officials say. Philip Rusted, an accountant who recently returned from a fact-findfirst food. "We were hoping to move sooner but you can't start zooming up without being properly geared," he said. Officials said that of the million of pounds raised by the twin concerts in Philadelphia and London, £2 million (about $2.8 million) had been spent on buying a fleet of trucks and setting up Artie Shaw has just completed a teams of relief workers. The reweeklong engagement with his new 16-member band at the Blue Note, est in bank accounts. The one of New York's top jazz clubs, and says it was the emotional peak of Live Aid's organizers, and Signatures. mon Le Bon of the rock group Duran Duran went to Bermuda to pick up the island's contribution to Live Aid: a check for $210,413.

> A 3-year-old boy walked into Disneyland in Anaheim, California to become the park's 250 millionth visitor and win a bonanza of gifts as part of a yearlong celebration of Disneyland's 30th anniver-sary. Brooks Burr seemed a bit be wildered by all the fuss, smiling only when Mickey Mouse gave him a kiss. His father, Bruce, seemed more excited — not surprising, considering gifts such as a new Cadillac, a trip to Japan, thousands of free miles of air travel and a lifetime pass to all Disney theme Daejin Kim, 23, of Secul, is the winner of the sixth Robert Casadosus international piano competi-tion at the Cleveland Institute of Music. He won $5,000, an appearance with the Cleveland Orchestra. and recitals at the Cleveland Muse um of Art and the Maison Franappear as a soloist with the Or-chestre Pasdeloup in Paris and the Orchestre Philharmonique in Lille.

Senator Edward M. Kennedy is irate over a forthcoming book about his former wife that says he had an active extra-marital love life, the Boston Herald reports. "Living With the Kennedys" by Marcia Chellis says affairs eventually drove Kennedy's wife, Joan, to drink and divorce, the Herald reported. Some Kennedy-watchers believe the book will hurt Kennedy's chances for the White House. ing trip to Africa, said he could not say when Live Aid would ship the senator's women problem, as it's been called, now will grow into a loud murmur," said Peter Collies; author of "The Kennedys: An American Drama." He predicted it would be "a major issue." A Kennedy spokesman, Brian Delaney, pooh-poohed that notion, though "It's probably the 300th book onthe Kennedys," he said.
